Seventh-day Adventists are indeed a people of destiny. And like the church of Christ’s day, we have a stake in the outcome of the world's situation. We've been teaching and preaching this stuff for years. What is Christ waiting for? He is waiting and longing for the manifestation of Himself in His church.
"I sometimes wonder how my dad would have turned out if he had not been recruited by the Civilian Conservation Corps. If not for those life experiences and lessons, would he have raised a family that now includes ministers, teachers, medical professionals, decorated war veterans and yes, the director of the Office of Volunteer Ministries?" READ MORE from NAD"s Office of Volunteer Ministries director Ernest Hernandez.

"Engagers" are at the front lines of mission and can serve as a powerful mechanism for community care. These empathetic individuals can operate within an organization or independently to engage in online conversations for the purpose of building meaningful relationships, understanding needs, and determining meaningful ways to serve others in both local and online communities. “When Jesus prayed, He prayed that all may be one, together in community — not separately, not individually. Community is the key word. I love that. I love that when we come together each morning here, we are a community. Different shades, different backgrounds, different cultures, different people, but a community. I love that when I go and share with my chaplains from around the North American Division, that I can share about my North American Division community.

“Jesus wanted the Christian community to know the fullness of God’s love as He, Himself, had known it. He wanted the Father to love that community. He prayed to the Father. The same way that the Father loved Him, He wanted the Father to love us. He prayed this abundance of love that created real and meaningful community, notwithstanding the differences.”

— Gilda Roddy, assistant director for Adventist Chaplaincy for the North American Division, referencing John 17:20-26, during NAD staff worship on Feb. 10, 2020
